Excerpt from A History of Private Bill Legislation, Vol. 1 of 2 Minor legislation, in one sense, private statutes no doubt are. Yet, if we look at their results in the numerous Acts Obtained by Local Authorities, as well as in our canal and railway systems, our water-works, gas-works, tramways, docks, harbour and river improvements, and other enterprises, we may see how immense an influence they have exercised for the public good. An attempt is made in these volumes to trace the growth of this jurisdiction over personal rights and interests, the powers of local authorities, and those of the trading corporations which have had so sudden a rise and so vast a development, mainly during the Victorian era. All these rights and powers, intimately affecting the social life of the British people, are the creation of private and local statutes. On the faith of these Acts, a colossal capital has been subscribed and lent under conditions and for objects approved by Parliament, often after patient and prolonged inquiry. Investors have trusted to the continued control of Parliament, and to the security thus afforded against uncalled-for interference with their interests. To this same control, again, the public have always looked for protection against arbitrary powers or monopoly.
